- I learned that homeless people aren't scary and some people pretend to be one.
- I enjoyed the play about Richard and Penny.
- It helped me think about homeless people and what they're lives were like.
- I would like to have it again.

What I learnt: I learnt that old people aren't always as happy as they seem on the outside. I also learnt that if their partner has died they could be lonely and don't tell other.

What did I enjoy: I liked the play between the grampa and granddaughter and that they weren't scared to use realistic language.

What did it make me think about: The way that old people feel and how you would help.

Would you like something like this again: Yeah, but less of the work on homeless people.

- I learned how to express my opinions in a better way.
- It was good how there was comedy and it made it some light relief.
- It made me think of old people and how I treat them.
- I would be good to have a workshop on why there is so much bad in the world.
- I would give more time to the afternoon workshop.

During the session I learned about homeless people aren't always horrible – they might look scary but deep down they could be nice, caring people.

- I learned to respect elderly people then if you do that they will respect you back.
- Not to judge people if you don't know them.
- To be able to talk about death easily.
- How to react to homeless.

What I enjoyed: I enjoyed getting put into groups and going off and making posters/ and reading plays out.

I also enjoyed the play that Beth, Tasha, Gaia and Peter did – it was really good and funny.

It made me think about how other's might feel towards things and not to judge people if you don't know them.

Yes I would like to do something like this again on life-stuff like that.

You could let us do more things, not so much talking.

It was funny and I enjoyed it.

It was delightful and I met a famous person.

I learnt that Chris enjoyed making home movies.

- I learned things about homeless people and the old people's loneliness.
- I enjoyed the play about the grandfather and the granddaughter and making the homeless poster.
- It made me think about how some old people feel about young people.
- I would like another workshop but I'm not sure about what.

ART

- I enjoyed it, it was fun
- It made me think
- It was interesting
- It was well thought out
- I didn't really like being with the other years, it made me more nervous
- I'm very glad I met the captain from Doctor Who (my favourite TV series)
- It showed that if you help a homeless person they will give you something back
- It was a great change

Homelessness

- Felt like we were being forced into feeling sorry for them
- Knew most of what was said before

Generation Gap

- Didn't really know much about it before
- Some of it was tricky to listen to
- Some parts were upsetting

I would like to see this again, it was enjoyable, funny and hard hitting.

Homelessness

- I didn't really see the point in it. I already knew everything that we talked about.

Generation Gap

- I really enjoyed the second half. It really opened my eyes to how we should treat our elders.
- Maybe in the first half do more drama
- I didn't like the mixed peer groups, it made me feel too nervous. The younger group was much better though.
- But all over it was very good, I especially liked playing the part of the granddaughter.

- Generation Gap
- I learned that not all homeless people steal or take drugs or spend the only money they get on alcohol.
 - I enjoyed the play at the end because it had a good storyline.
 - It made me think about how homeless people might feel.
 - Yeah, maybe bullying or something.

We look at generation, right to die, happiness and wellbeing.

I wasn't here for half the day but I did play Guar mark and I found it great to investigate the meanings of life that was in the story.

Playing Guar mark and looking at the story helped to give me different views on life, death and everything really. It taught me that sometimes you have to just look beyond the surface of matters and it also taught me that it's better to be happy inside.

By stopping and discussing the different issues it got me (and everyone) to think. I liked that.

I would like to find out about finding yourself and confidence.

I learned

- To respect my elders
- Not to be afraid to talk about death
- How old people feel
- It's hard to know what to do when you see a homeless person
- Not to judge people
- Homeless people all have their own story and they are not always stupid.

I enjoyed working with S4s and talking in groups with Chris coz he was hilarious.

The workshop made me think about others and that everyone is fighting their own battle so don't judge.

I would like to do workshops like this because it was fun and I learnt a lot. I'm not sure what on though.

Homelessness

I liked this workshop because I used to think homeless people just got in the way and were in that position because they didn't try hard enough at school and it was their fault.

I realise that everyone has a story. In the play with Penny and Richard, Penny was really smart and loyal and in the end she got what she wanted.

Generation Gap

The play was really good and the actors were amazing.

I've never thought about getting old before.

Homelessness

I enjoyed talking about homeless people and making posters. I learned that all homeless people are different, don't judge someone if you don't know their story.

I didn't like doing the script thing, it was really boring listening to everyone.

I thought going with the S4s would be horrible and I would be scared and intimidated but once I was with them I was fine and it brought out confidence. There was too much homeless stuff maybe split it up a bit.

Generation Gap

I have now learned that in my opinion I think people should have the right to die if they want and how to treat old people and how they should treat us.

I really enjoyed all of it and it was worth doing and I would really like to do it again. I would like to do it about gay people.

- I enjoyed doing the sciences and making a play up.
 - I learned that not all homeless people spend money on alcohol or buy drugs with money you give them.
 - Yeah I would like something to like this to happen again because I liked the classes being mixed and doing the sciences. I liked it.
